Annuity Do's & Don'ts for Baby Boomers

Annuity Do›s & Don›ts

Practical tips for getting the most out of your annuity.

Do: Outline your wants, needs, and goals.

No two retirement plans are the same. Start your plan at the beginning – with you, and what matters most in your life.

What do you want out of retirement? How have you envisioned the golden years of your life?

For many Americans, retirement isn't just a time to kick back and relax (though it is certainly that, as well!) – it's a time for new ventures and fulfilled passions. It's the time where our lifelong aspirations and personal interests become realized.

Those vacations we always planned to take, the books we meant to read, the hobbies we always wanted to take up… retirement is the time and place to make that happen.

As you go through this book, and as you prepare to make some of the most important decisions of your life, keep your focus on what you're setting aside this money for. What matters most to you?

Now is also a good time to evaluate what you're going to need during your retirement.

Take a close look at the income and assets you know you'll have available to you. Does it make sense in your retirement to have a reliable stream of income to supplement any other plans you have?

Use the worksheet to the right to help you gather all your financial information into one place so that you can really start to look at the big picture.

Don't: Rely on your neighbor's advice for an annuity.

While your neighbor, family member, or somebody else you know may be very smart and may have the perfect annuity set up for themselves, unless they're professionals in the field, they probably don't have all the information available to help you find the best option for you.

What turned out to be a fantastic idea for your cousin, may disrupt your idea of a perfect retirement. Or, it might not be the most optimized solution based on your unique situation.

If you do whatever it is your neighbor is doing without having a qualified specialist reviewing what the best option is based on you, you're likely leaving a substantial amount of money on the table.

Don't: Leave your employer's money on the table.

Did you know you could use your 401(k) and roll it into an annuity? Getting the most out of your annuity is a lot easier when you're picking up all the money available to you in the first place.

If you have a 401(k) or other employer-sponsored retirement program, take full advantage of it. When you're utilizing programs with employer-matching, you're getting free money – money that will help you live a more financially confident retirement.

Do: Set aside the appropriate funds for your annuity.

Once you've evaluated your goals, what your needs will be during retirement, and the assets you have available, it's time to make sure that you're reserving enough money for your annuity to be sure you'll be supported throughout your retirement. The last thing you want is your money running out before you do!

We know that saving money is always easier said than done, but here are a few quick tips that can help you enjoy your retirement with financial confidence.

Know the difference between your paychecks and your playchecks.

This will help you simplify money decisions that make sense in your life. What money is being funneled into covering your needs – both predictable and unforeseen? What money is leftover for the things you want to do?

Do: Strategize the timing of your annuity.

Sometimes it's not enough to know which annuity is right for you, but when the optimal time to get it for you is.

This requires accounting for a number of factors, the chief among them being taxes and your age.

Coordinate your annuity with any other pensions, 401(k)s, Roth IRAs, and any other income or assets you have to get the best tax break available to you.

Keep track of what's tax-deferred, what's not, and how much income you expect to claim each year to get the most out of your money.

When it comes to timing, it also counts to strategize your issue age. If you have enough assets to last through the first part of your retirement, you may find that you'd prefer a later issue date so that your annuity checks will be larger.

Don't: Forget about your spouse.

If you have a spouse who relies on your income for their needs, talking to your financial advisor or annuity representative about getting a joint life annuity could ensure that your spouse is protected and provided for, even after you're gone.

Some companies have products that allow you to purchase riders to provide ongoing payments to your spouse. There may be an additional cost for these riders, but it could mean an entirely different quality of life for your spouse if you don't.

Explore all your options and talk to your spouse about the best course of action for the both of you.

Do: Set aside emergency funds.

Once you purchase an annuity, that money is locked up in your contractual agreement to give you the biggest paycheck in the long-term.

Because there are often surrender charges associated with withdrawing money from your annuity early, most people sleep easier when they've kept some of their money aside.

Assume that there could be a surprise or two you didn't foresee between now and your issue age and be prepared.

Don't: Sign anything without understanding your contract in full.

You deserve to be confident in every detail of your contract before committing to it.

If you have any questions about what you're agreeing to, seek the advice of a licensed annuity representative. They'll be able to explain to you what you're getting and any applicable obligations on either your part, or the part of the issuing provider.

This can save you a lot of headaches and potentially a disastrous situation waiting to happen. When you're better informed, you're better in control.

Do: Talk to a professional in the industry.

Annuities are legal contracts with many options and a lot riding on the line.

It's not something you'll want to leave up to chance.

Always be absolutely sure you're doing the right thing for you by discussing the details of the annuity and how it fits into your overall retirement goals with someone who is educated and experienced in this area.

Annuity guarantees rely on the financial strength and claims-paying ability of the issuing insurance company and are not guaranteed by any bank or the FDIC.

Some annuities may have a lifetime income guarantee as part of the base policy; others may have riders available that provide this benefit. Riders may also be available for benefits like an annual increase to help combat inflation or for as much as doubling your income in case of a qualifying health event. These annuities are not long-term care and are not substitute for such coverage. Optional riders may be available with a charge.

Increased income is possible following a specific strategy suited to your financial goals and may require buying multiple annuities. Results could vary.

Most annuities have a withdrawal (surrender) period for the first five to 15 years of ownership. After the first year, however, you may be able to withdraw up to 10% of the account value without penalty. Withdrawals may significantly reduce the guaranteed* withdrawal and death benefit amounts, and any withdrawal prior to age 59½ may be subject to an additional 10% federal income tax penalty. See your annuity contract for terms, exclusions and limitations.

Many annuities have a death benefit; however, if the annuity-owner has received the full amount of withdrawal value, no death benefit may remain at the annuity-owner's death. Loans and excess withdrawals will reduce the policy value and death benefit. See your annuity contract for terms, exclusions and limitations.
